When a sailor, particularly a warship sailor, wants whiskey he wants it badly, and generally gets it.

Jack has always had the reputation of possessing an ever-present desire to saturate himself with liquor of a deep red nue, and judging from the schemes he resorts to to get it when his employer, the United States Government, says he mustn't have it, the reputation is not wholly undeserved.

I tacle Sam prohibits his bluejackets from swallowing or having liquor in their possession when on Government premises. So Jack must exercise bis wits if he would gratify his appetite. That the sailor man gives his gray matter full play in this quest for intoxicants is evidenced by the ingenious methods he Brass bands, torches and fireworks have entered into the political controversy between the Republican reorganizer, Naval Officer Willis, and the militant boss, Internal Revenue Collector Nathan. These are made elements of discord by two dozen members of the Pifth Ward Republican Association, who, with Henry Michaelis as their leader, have flopped from Nathan to Willis. The reason they give for this change from practical to theoretical politics is that Mr. Nathan was not liberal enough with campaign outfits during the few weeks previous to the late land-skilde.

The Fifth Warders believe that under the Philadelphia system, guaranteed by one more or less noted David Martin, they would get all the flaming banners, bright torches and sizzling sky-rockets they could possibly use, and as politics without such paraphernalia loses its charm, they have become ardent advocates of the Quaker City plan.

As a further stab at Mr. Nathan, Mr. Michaelis states for publication that the only genuine Republican organization in the ward is the Protection Club, to which only Willisites belong.

"When Whitelaw Reid visited this city," said Mr. Michaelis, "some of our members called at the campaign head-quarters and made the request that the Club be furnished with torches or other articles, in order that we might make a "The two older girls attended the matter full play in this quest for intoxicants is evidenced by the Ingenious methods he adopts to get a surreptitious supply. The briefs contain no new points, but simply cite the cases quoted in his argument befor the Court two weeks ago, by which he seeks to have the liddiction ments quashed, on the ground that the defendants were indicted on insufficient evidence, and that some of them were deprived of their constitutional rights.

Judge Moore has been examining the matter thoroughly, and a decision is looked for early next week.

figured a minute. 'How much do we pay you now?" "Twelve dollars a week, sir."

"Twelve dollars, m-m-in; well, Jone I will give you a raise under the cir-cumstances, though we can't hardly afford it at this season. We will pay you $625 for the coming year, and perhaps after that, if you are faithful, we ma do better still. Now, mind, I don't think that's enough to risk a wife on but will increase you that much, and you can do as you please."

That day was a very busy day for Jones, and he had little time to be grateful for the unexpected liberality of old Blank. But in the evening he quit work enveloped in such soft dreams of love and fortune that he gallantly ros and gave his seat in the car to a tiredlooking young lady who had hair the same color as Angelica's.

When the conductor called out Ash land boulevard Jones got off, as he always did.

about Jones. The people who rode home with him every evening gradually got to believing that he was very wealthy and very aristocratic. From his manner he was at least a millionaire, they judged and the fact that he lived on the fashionable boulevard proved his social standing beyond a doubt. As a told you, Jones did not live on the boulevard, and he could have ridden four blocks nearer home, but he was a kindly-natured soul He knew the delusions of his fellow passengers, and every night walked four blocks through the cold or the mud, as the case might be, rather than destroy those pleasant conceits.

After a light supper and a very elaborate toilet, for Jones was a man of fashion, he took an Ogden avenue car, and went, oh, ever so many blocks southwest. outhwest.
He was greeted rapturously by young woman, who laid her fair head on his shoulder and softly murmured words of love.

"Oh, darling, how lovely it is for you to be here. Two whole dreary days without seeing you has broken my heart. Oh, it has been awful, awful,

"Glad to hear it, Jones; glad to hear

There was no faltering in her clear, blue eye, but rather a cold, hard glitter-lee and grantle in her tones. "Str." she hissed, "you have basely de eived an innocent and confiding gar." "Oh, darling! The heartbroken wall of the strong man filled the room and

Oh, darling! The heartbroken wall of the strong man filled the room and echoed in strange, mountful caleinees as it escaped through the transom.

As the ast faint reverberation died away in the distance Angelica threw herself in her father's arms.

"Oh, papa" she sobbed shutderingly, save me save me and send the horrid thing away.

"Go" cried the father, hoarnely. "To while there is yet time.

Jones gat himself together and fielded do into the alght, the sound of bells told him that the old year, with all its delusive joys and fleeting modern ments of happiness, was dead and forever gone. The cold, merciless air of the left his hat and overcost on the rack in Angelica's feudal halls, and he heat his breast and prayed for death.

At that moment Angelica rose from her father's arms and opened her father in an analysis of hopeless confusion; some of her saids blown the lips and spake.

"Oh, what a chump!"—Exchange.
